The present invention generally provides for a system and method to receive a user request and identify multiple adjacent users within a network. The user request may include a request by the user to be placed into a first, second, or third tier of communications with a user network. The identified multiple users may correspond to users that have not requested any communications with the user network or to users that have indicated to the user network that they do not want any communications with the user network. The user network may be a mobile device network, a local area network (LAN), or any other like network.(Reuters) - A U.S. appeals court said on Friday that a Florida man can sell his mansion for $3.08 million even though it once belonged to the Beatles' manager, a ruling that could cause property values in the area to surge. Slideshow ( 2 images ) The U.S. Court of Appeals for the 11th Circuit ruled 2-1 that a lower court's decision to keep the price of the mansion from being set in line with sales of similarly-sized properties was in error. The case involved a dispute between former Beatles manager Ron Oberlander and a man who purchased the home in 2006 for $4.5 million. Oberlander had held onto the property for two years, taking no money for the 2,000-square-foot (187-square-meter) home in Lakewood Ranch, about 20 miles (30 km) west of Miami. Oberlander said he had given up ownership so he could sell the home at a higher price, and indicated that he would keep all proceeds above the $3.08 million price. A lawsuit followed. In 2012, Oberlander said he had intended to sell the property for $9.6 million. On a webpage, the now-defunct property had a asking price of $5.24 million. But it was the proposed price after the court ruling that blew up into a potential market-wide issue. "The law is clear," said real estate lawyer Paul Jacquet in Santa Fe, New Mexico, who was not involved in the case. "There is no such thing as a 'win-win' when it comes to property valuation.... To the extent that Lakewood Ranch property is now going to be undervalued, there's going to be a price runup." Jacquet said a house sitting vacant 3e33713323
