A search for "pig voice" gives many hits. Have a look at this one. Q: Is there a way to do a data warehouse with different schema versions? I work for a small company that runs a.NET application with sub-optimal database schema. The schema have not been reviewed for a while. I am interested in finding a solution to take this database and create a data warehouse in another software, something like Cognos BI. I have very limited experience with this type of stuff. I know I am not going to get any data in the other software unless I upgrade the database. I was thinking about loading data in an Excel sheet, then loading into an SSIS package and then doing the transformation on the data in a data warehouse. Any other suggestions are welcome. A: SSIS loads from a DB to a flat file, no. What you have is Excel loaded to flat file. SSIS is not a pipeline that will convert one type of file to another type of file. Therefore the solution you are thinking of, at the least, will involve more code. Consider it an implementation of a 3rd party DWH. If you are getting SQL Server data out of this system, that may be a good option. If not, you will have to either up your SQL Server skills, which won't be easy, or learn to work with flat files. No one dies when the bomb drops... "No one dies when the bomb drops" is a common military expression, and is often used in various other contexts. Origin The expression is a paraphrase of an old adage: "no man dies of anything but poison" which dates to the 16th century; the earliest known occurrence of the phrase in print is from 1564 (more than sixty years earlier than the "no one dies when the bomb drops 570a42141b
