There are a couple of issues I'm having, mostly because I'm not sure if my solution actually accomplishes what I'm aiming for. First, I don't want to use jquery's.ajax(). I want to do it using plain Javascript. However, I want to perform this ajax call if something happens on the dropdown. To do this, I'm using jquery's.change() event. Once the data is returned from the AJAX call, I want to replace the content of the dropdown with the returned data. Since this is already an 'onchange' event, I'm placing the logic that replaces the contents of the dropdown into the event as well. It seems that events can be applied to a lot more than the object that originally fired it, as I'm not sure what kind of events I can apply to DOM objects. The problem that I'm running into is that once the data is returned, I need to re-fire the event on the dropdown. However, when a event is fired, it doesn't actually get sent to the document for processing. Any suggestions on how I can accomplish this? function selectBox() { var theValue = $('' + dropdown).
