What's new in Elden Ring:

I waited three weeks for the best service to deliver, you guys did just that. I know this is a great job, and I would do it again in a heartbeat. Thanks!

Tue, 29 Sep 2018 15:19:28 +0000 didn't think GD was 2x more after

After)

I had a single player game at the beginning of August, and I came back after a few months to find that not only did I need to go and purchase an SD card to replace the one I lost because I took it out to run a test patch, but I needed to go and purchase a mouse pad.

So, I purchased a mouse, and I'm left with a working track pad!

It's fine, and I love it more than I could have hoped and more than I ever would have wanted. But, after using it, I noticed that it sends fewer clicks and cursor changes than the game or the mouse in the game do. Usually I end up clicking a little to the left, but it's only slight. And when I moved away from the mouse, it clicked a little further to the left.

It's not bad, but if they were able to solve that peripheral problem, it would certainly be an improvement.

At first, I thought it must be because I switched peripherals, but even after using the same one, I'd get the same problem when I switched to the new mouse. So even after replacing the USB cable and that doesn't change.

It's strange. I thought I was doing something wrong. Now

I've looked around at all my other peripherals and I still can't find anything. In fact, even my backlit keyboard has the same little problem.
