Sign up for our COVID-19 newsletter to stay up-to-date on the latest coronavirus news throughout New York The MTA's new $200-million portion of the L train shutdown project has landed a massive pitfall requiring major repairs, transit officials revealed Monday. Because of a sheer cliff below ground level, the new De-Arco tunnels — which will provide additional relief on the overcrowded M train route— were designed with a slope that threatens to put water pipes throughout the tunnels at risk of failing. "Water leaks into the tunnels," said MTA spokesman Max Young. "At the moment, the plan is to take the water out of the tunnel and through the pipes and over the tracks above the tunnels, and out of the tunnel by the platform." The tunnels and an R train station under the Atlantic Avenue-Archer Avenue stop will remain closed into April while the problems are corrected. De-Arco, a Seattle-based tunneling firm, is doing the work. The tunneling firm says it has encountered similar problems as it digs under the Hudson River. The firm said it is using special tools to keep the water out while fixing the problem. The De-Arco contract was approved by the MTA in early 2012. They will relieve pressure on the M train's overcrowded tracks, which run from Atlantic Avenue to Midtown South. The W train — which will pass through the new De-Arco tunnels and over the new New Lots stop— will have stations at Union Square, Atlantic Avenue-South Ferry, St. Nicholas and Canal Street. The W train will have new cars that feature full-height windows with floor-to-ceiling panoramic views for riders, Young said. The W train is scheduled to begin operating in 2015.
